

In these times when journalists are disrespected, condemned, ridiculed, assaulted and constantly face layoffs, pay cuts and worse, let it be known that we honor and support journalists and journalism. Keep at it. Your work is important to the people and essential to democracy itself. - Roger Summers

Paula LaRocque, 1937-2021

Paula LaRocque had a love affair with the written word, and a legion of scribes across the nation are better off for it.

She authored three non-fiction books — “Championship Writing,” “The Book on Writing,” “On Words: Insights into How Our Words Work – And Don’t” — and was the writing coach at The Dallas Morning News in 1981-2001.

Her commentaries on language aired regularly for many years on National Public Radio in Dallas. A longtime member of SPJ, she wrote a column for its Quill magazine or 20 years and was a consultant for the Drehscheibe Institute in Bonn, Germany, and for European Stars and Stripes.

She taught students at SMU, TCU, Texas A&M and Western Michigan University and professionals at myriad communication seminars for corporations and institutes. She served on the executive board of the Associated Press and received its Meritorious Service Award for Exemplary Service to Journalism.

In the last few years she wrote a blog on writing. Her affinity for words and their relationship to each other and with readers was obvious.

She was a member of the Dallas-Fort Worth Writers Workshop and of Mystery Writers of America. In 2011 she wrote her first novel, “Chalk Line” — appropriately, a murder mystery.

She earned a BA degree summa cum laude and an MA from Western Michigan and also worked on a doctorate, but her career became so demanding she did not complete it.

Paula died June 1. A gathering of friends will be held at a later date to commemorate her life.

She was married to longtime Fort Worth Star-Telegram editorial director Paul LaRocque. Paul's e-mail is paullarocque@sbcglobal.net.

F.O.I.F.T. UPDATE State agencies are abusing the Texas Public Information Act and the Texas attorney general's "skeleton crew" guidance. Some have not responded to records requests even though they were working remotely during covid-19 (most records are available electronically). The Freedom of Information Foundation of Texas has urged the AG's office to update its guidance on TPIA business days in relation to government office physical closures and "skeleton crews." Details here and here.

PEOPLE & PLACES Submission deadline is July 16 for proposals from qualified agencies to support Trinity Metro marketing and advertising efforts in bus, rail and micro-transit services. The selected agency will develop and implement campaigns designed to increase ridership and improve sentiment toward public transportation and Trinity Metro. More here; reference RFP 21-T037.

It just looks new: Attempts to enlighten newsroom culture — essentially the struggle for minority groups to gain a presence and a voice — have been ongoing for more than 50 years, USC prof and former New York Times and Wall Street Journal reporter Bill Celis said in a wide-ranging Zoom session in May.

Celis, in the first of several Fort Worth SPJ discussions on the evolution of newsrooms, said calling for increased inclusion harkens back to the 1968 Kerner Commission findings that a white-oriented news media played a role in the inner-city riots that plagued America in the mid- to late 1960s.

Numerous indictments of journalism came out of the report, Celis said, such as findings of "uneven, inaccurate and nonexistent" coverage of the black community. "When you read the report, it's astonishing. The writers could be writing about 21st-century America. Now instead of just black Americans, you include Latinos, Asians, LGBTQ immigrants and working-class people who include poor white Americans."

Spurred by a "racial reckoning" for social justice, news organizations are revisiting diversity initiatives that had languished. Some newsrooms are tying management incentives to coverage and hirings that better reflect the communities served. "It's happened very quietly," Celis said. Overall, he added, the news business has made progress. "There's always a lot of handwringing, but dig a little bit, and you see good things happening."

Celis is a former associate dean and director of USC's Annenberg School for Communication and Journalism; his diversity initiatives drew praise from the American Society of News Editors and the Association of Educators of Journalism and Mass Communication. While at USC he sought out employers and set up 20-plus paid internships in Southern California because he so disliked unpaid internships.

"I got tired of watching the division (between haves and have-nots). It wasn't just wealthy white students — there were students of color who could afford them — but the kids who couldn't take them were young people of color from south LA, growing up in Watts, first-generation students."

He said the early efforts to effect newsroom change had rough patches because of friction between the minority groups and management and also within the minority factions vying for advantage. He said younger generations have greater solidarity.

"These dust-ups are another layer of complication, but it's a generational thing. I think that when a critical mass begin to work themselves into leadership situations, things are going to start to change substantively and permanently."
